When in a job search there are always things to do. However, we often get sidetracked and just sit and stare out the window. There are a lot of things we can do, like balance the checkbook or take a nap. But does it get us closer to a new position? When you've sent the resumes and now you are playing the waiting game, what else is there? How do you motivate yourself? What can you do when you think you have nothing left to do? A career coach offers career advice with a list of 29 Things to make your job search a success.

About the AuthorA native of southern New Jersey, Rosemary Augustine spent most of her adult life living in California and Colorado and returned to the Philadelphia area in 2001 to care for an aging parent. A career coach for 25 years, Rosemary published her first book Facing Changes in Employment in 1995. Rosemary Augustine has provided career counseling/coaching to individuals from all walks of life both in her private practice and through the international outplacement firm of Lee Hecht Harrison. In 1996, CareerAdvice.com was founded by her at a time when the internet was just getting started for the general population. As an entrepreneur for 25+ years, Rosemary consulted with both individual and corporate clients on topics of career transition, career change and entrepreneurship. She helped many people transition from Corporate America into their own business even though many people often identify her with effective job search techniques. Today, Rosemary is retired and calls Melbourne, Florida home. She continues to write and has over 10 published books on topics of career, creative writing and cat humor.
